G. P. AULD, paymaster in the United States Navy, who has been in Burlington on a leave of absence for several weeks, went to New York Monday night and from there to Seattle, Wash., to take station on the armored cruiser Pennsylvania of the Pacific fleet.

Raymond, the young child of Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Barker of Rutland, was run into by a team Sunday and thrown down, being quite badly bruised. The occupants of the team drove on without stopping to see how seriously the child was injured.

That hot steam would melt the para-fin wax from the surface of the oil rock and permit the oil to run free, has been a well-known fact, but to difficulty heretofore has been in the degree of combustion which occurred by the time the steam reached the shot cavity. The boiling water which resulted, in addition to being injurious to the oil-bearing seats, caused the wax to set even harder than it had before.

Dr. Monroe's service consists, first, of a metal tube twelve feet long and four and a quarter inches in diameter. In the upper part of this tube is inserted a cylinder containing water with a small aperture at the bottom regurgitating the flow and distributing it evenly over the outside of a disk. In the lower part of the cylinder are inserted cast-iron bolts which have been heated white hot; the ends of the tubing are then plugged. At three points in the tubing, near the top, bottom and center are rows of small holes. The water from the cylinder dropped on to these heated bolts generates steam, which is forced through and out of these holes with great force, spraying the paraffin covered walls of the shot cavity with hot dry steam. From "Making Old Well Spots," in the March Technical World Magazine.

One Year of Taft, by Edward G. Lowry, the well-known Washington correspondent, is a striking and timely article in the March number of The North American Review, summing up Mr. Taft's administration since last March. Mr. Lowry makes a searching examination of Mr. Taft's position at the present time. Among other things, he tells some new and interesting history of the close of Mr. Roosevelt's administration. To quote:

"Toward the close of his administration Mr. Roosevelt concerned himself largely with the choice of his successor.
He wanted a president to succeed him in the White House, who would 'clinch my policies.' He was a long while making up his mind. For a time he was inclined to name Elihu Root, his secretary of state, and William H. Taft, his secretary of war. He thought at one time that Mr. Root might do well but that he was too old to be fit for the office. Then he decided upon Mr.
Taft, whom he had known well for many years.

There is one point in which we must agree with the people who oppose old age pensions for America, says Walter Weyl in "Success Magazine." Pensions, they say, are merely a palliative. What the aging man needs is not so much a pension as a chance to work, and the intelligence to enable him to work.
It is very true, let us put our minds and our purse to the task of preventing child-labor, excessive toll, unhygienic houses and factories, and other things which cripple men in middle and old age. Let us give industrial and technical education, so that a man may be permanently equipped for earning his living. Let us raise the whole standard of the working and earning population of the country so that each man may be able to provide for his old age, at least that all by joint action may insure all. But in the meanwhile let us accord a decent life to worthy men and women, who have not had the advantages which future generations will have. That is about a fine manner, courtesy, cheerfulness, and kindly, obliging helpfulness.
